In all households there is more or less waste, and how much or little this may be depends wholly upon the housewife. If she is a good manager very little will go to waste in her house, for such a woman usually contrives to use about everything that can be used, and what isn't used is of very little account. In buying eatables she is not particular that she should get to the ounce what she knows is plenty for the meal. If there are a few ounces over she does not care, for she reasons that they can be used in some other way, and they always are. It is the same when she purchases dress goods. She never buys exactly to the yard, but always a little more so if there should be a mistake made in the cutting or fitting, she will have enough ma-terial to remedy it, and if no mistake occurs, what she has left after the dress is made she uses either to trim another garment or make it into something for the children. When she buys a carpet she always gets a yard or two more than the room requires, for if she does not own her own house, she reasons that if she moves to a house where the rooms are larger, she will need one or two yards extra of the carpet to fit them properly, and if there is no necessity for moving, the extra pieces she uses for mats until some parts of the carpet begin to show signs of wear, when they are cut out and the extra pieces fitted in their places. If there are bits too small for any use on the floor alone, they, with other bits saved from carpets in other rooms, if of the same style of material, are sewn together at haphazard, forming a crazy rug, that is a pretty and useful addition to the furnishing of the house.

After dinner, the pieces of meat and vegetables that are left over are put carefully away, to make their appearance at the breakfast-table the next day, under a new name and so cleverly disgnised that, if not aware of it, it would never be surmised that they bore any relationship whatever to the same articles at the dinner of the day before. The pieces of cold beef or mutton are chopped fine, seasoned with pepper, salt, and a chopped paraley, made into round, flat cakes, dipped in egg and fried brown. The cold potatoes are cut into small bits, put in a stewpan with a little milk and butter and seasoned with pepper and salt. The stewed tomatoes are warmed over, and if the meat used for cakes, is mutton or lamb, with the tomatoes poured over it, it is an excellent substitute for lamb cutlets. The vegetables that cannot be used at breakfast are kept in a cool place until dinner, when they are warmed over carefully and served up the second time, in a manner that none but those knowing it would ever doubt but that they are freshly cooked.

Cucumbers that were sliced the day before are kept on ice until wanted, then they are treated to a bath of cold water, drained, re-iced and sent to the table as fresh and crisp as though just from the

Seldom does a visitor come to a house such as this and find the housewife unprepared. She may choose wash day, that day of all others when most housekeepers dread the appearance of a guest, yet, even then, this housewife is not wholly unprepared, and though it may be only what is called a picked-up dinner, yet, by her skilful management of the pieces, she sets on the table as tasteful and enjoyable a meal as many a woman would have who had been advised of the visitors coming. Her one maxim, that she lives rigidly up to, is, 'Save the pieces," and it will be found an excellent one for all good housekeepers to practise. - American Cultivator.

any other purpose than trimming lamps. A MIXTURE which is said to be a cure for undue perspiration of the hands is made of a quarter of an ounce of powdered alum, the white of one egg, and enough bran to make a thick paste. After washing the hands apply this; let it remain on the hands two or three minutes and then wipe off with a dry, soft towel. ## The Proud Mother.

Not only do the descendants of Americans who came over in the Mayflower or those who signed the Declaration of Independence pride themselves on their descent, but members of families that have lived respectable and While this was going on two other unknown are quite satisfied as to the high social position of themselves and their ancestors. The bearer of an illustrious surname quite properly looks upon the record of some local achievement, rather than the name's worldwide significance, as the source of family pride. In Rhode Island the surname Luther is very common. Some years ago the mother of a promising young Lnther was exhibiting the child's accomplishments for the edification of the newly settled pastor.

"And what is the name of your little boy, Mrs. Luther?" asked the clergyman. "Erasmns, sir."

"Erasmus Luther! Your son should have a brilliant future, for his name combines the names of two men of genius."

"Yes," said the gratified mother, "we named him after his uncle 'Rasmus; he was Selectman for ten years up to Cumberland."-Boston Transcript.

YAN PHOU LEE and Miss Elizabeth Jerdine were married at New Haven recently. Yan Phou Lee was one among a number of young men selected in 1880 by the Chinese Government to be sent to this country for a college education. The Government changed its mind and recalled them all. Yan Phou Lee outlawed himself by returning to renew his studies at Yale. He graduated this year, taking a prize for proficiency in political economy, history, and law, another for proficiency in English, besides being awarded the precious things. If I have good luck Larned scholarship prize. Yan Phou in robbing some other place I'll return Lee is 26 years old. His book, "When I Was a Boy in China," has just been

How Pretty Girls Are Made Ugly.

Three young girls of about 16, whose gowns show quite good taste, and whose faces tell of pleasant tempers and nimble minds, are in a parlor together, alone. One is reading aloud. Her voice is sweet and unaffected. She stops now and then, while the three discuss the book or their work, with much joking or laughter. They are clever, but tender and womanly. They are totally unconscious of themselves; their tones are low and sincere; there can be no doubt you are in the company of gentle-women.

Suddenly, presto! all is changed. A caller is announced. One of the young ladies stiffens herself, pinches in her lips, and speaks in mincing monosyllables. Another gurgles and giggles, blushes, and tosses her chin upward; she lisps her words with an absurd sweetness of voice and glances.

The third suddenly becomes a very washbuckler of a young woman. Hitherto she has spoken English; now she pretty fury and spiteful onset. On two falls into an unknown dialect.

"How is your mother, Jennie?" she s asked by the visitor. "Oh, top!"

"I heard your brother had gone to New York." "Oh, that was a fake. He was badly to fetch up." "You seem to know all that's going punished at foot-ball and is lying low

"Oh, yes; I'm fly."

One of her companions at this puts on an air of offended propriety, and shakes her head with stern reprobation. The other giggles, and drops her head on her breast affectedly.

What can have changed these simple, pleasant girls into puppets? Can it be the advent of a single youth, ringed and chained, and with a faint down upon his upper lip, to which is given all the attention his little mind is capable of giving?

Is it possible that any men prefer these simpering, prim, dash-away styles in women, which are sometimes so exaggerated in silly girls that their manner might befit slaves drawn up in the market, and trying to attract a buyer? So forced and unnatural is the conduct of some of our American girls, when a possible suitor is present, that nothing of their true selves is seen through it. They might as well be wrapped in the unbecoming head-dress and covering that makes the public enemies reared their second brood in dress of the Oriental woman. - Youth's peace. - Cassell's Magazine. ## Scotch Cure for Whooping-Cough.

Old Scottish people, or those conversant with the superstitions and customs of the country, are well aware of the efficacy of the cure which the ass was supposed to have wrought in the case of the whooping-cough, and the following incidents will be read with interest: One afternoon recently a curious display of superstition occurred at Maryhill, within view of the police office. Measels and whooping-cough are prevalent among children in the burg at present, and a traveling candyman and rag gatherer, with a cart drawn by an ass, drew up in front of a row of houses known as "Pirrat's row," a little off of the highway. Two children living in the quarter are afflicted with whooping-cough. It has not transpired what compensation the proprietor of the ass received for the superstitious use of it, in the belief that it would cure the children of the cough, but after a short conversation the mothers of the children took up a position on each side of the ass. One woman then took up a position on each side of the ass. One women then took one of the children and passed it through below the ass' belly to the other women, the child's face being toward the ground. The woman on the other side caught hold of the child, and giving it a gentle somersault, handed it back to the other woman over the ass, the child's head being turned toward the sky. The process having been repeated three times, the child was taken away to the house, and then the second child was similarly treated. children were quickly brought to undergo the magical cure. In order that the operation may have its due effect the ass must not be forgotten, and at the close of the ceremony each mother must carry her child to the head of the animal and allow it to eat something, such as bread or biscuits, out of the child's lap. This proceeding having been performed in turn by the four mothers, the prescribed course was concluded. When it began there were not many people present, but before it was finished quite a crowd of spectators had gathered. From inquiries made afterward, it seems the mothers are thoroughy satisfied that their chil-dren are the better of the enchantment. -Greenock Telegraph.

Forced War Loans.

When Gen. Martinez of Mexico was fighting against Maximilian he and his soldiers were in the habit of taking what they wanted from the people, even going so far as to levy on the treasures of the churches. One day the sacristan of a certain church found two of the soldiers from the army of Martinez on their knees before the altar of Our Lady of Guadalupe. The shrine was covered with coins and jewels, placed there by devotees on offering up prayers for the safety of the absent ones, or in gratitude for deliverance from some peril. And one of the "Macheteros" was praying like this:

"My dear, holy lady! I'm a poor boy. I've been in the army a year, and I haven't made anything so far. I've a very poor family. They may be starv-ing. I'm obliged to take some of these these."

So saying he arose from his knees and coolly swept the shrine of its valuables.

Wrens and Bluebirds Fighting. The bluebirds early took possession and in June their first brood had flown evidently with an eye on the place-such little comedies may be witnessed anywhere—and now very naturally thought it was their turn. A day or two after the young bluebirds had flown I noticed some fine, dry grass clinging to the entrance of the cavity, a circumstance which I understood few moments later, when the wren rushed by me into the cover of a small Norway spruce, hotly pursued by the male bluebird. It was a brown streak and a blue streak pretty close together. The wrens had gone to housecleaning, and the bluebird had returned to find his bed and bedding being pitched out of doors, and had thereupon given the wren to understand in the most emphatic manner that he had no intentions of vacating the premises so early in the season. Day after day, for more than two weeks, the male bluebird had to clear his premises of these intruders. It occupied much of his time and not a little of mine, as I sat with a book in a summer-house near by, laughing at his occasions the wren rushed under the chair in which I sat, and a streak of blue lightning almost flashed in my face. One day, just as I had passed the tree in which the cavity was placed, I heard the wren scream desperately turning, I saw the little vagabond fall into the grass with the wrathful bluebird fairly upon him. The latter had returned just in time to catch him, and was evidently bent on punishing him well. But in the squabble in the grass the wren escaped and took refuge in the friendly evergreen. The bluebird paused for a moment with outstretched wings looking for the fugitive, then flew away. A score of times during the month of June did I see the wren taxing every energy to get away from the bluebird. He would dart into the stonewall, under the floor of the summer house, into the weeds-anywhere to hide his diminished head. The bluebird with his bright coat looked like a policeman in uniform in pursuit of some wicked, rusty little street gamin. Generally the favorite house of refuge of the wren was a little spruce, into which their pursuer made no attempt to follow them. The female would sit concealed amid the branches, chattering in a scolding, fretful way, while the male, with his eye upon his tormentor, would perch on the topmost shoot and sing. Why he sang at such times-whether in triumph and derision, or to keep his courage up and reassure his mate-I could not make out. When his song was suddenly cut short, and I glanced to see him dart down into the spruce, my eye usually caught a twinkle of blue wings hovering near. The wrens finally gave up the fight, and their

It is said to be the only inland salt lake in the United States except the one in Utah, and is pronounced by medical experts to contain properties that make it much superior to ourf bathing. The springs at that place are also one of the strange natural curiosities of this continent, being seven in number and each different in mineral constituents, and are all situated within a space of thirty feet square. A complete analysis of these springs has never been made, but the excitement caused by the cure of several cases supposed here-tofore to be incurable, and notably one of them being Addison's disease, for which, it is said by medical works, there is no cure, has caused the corporation who have lly purchased the springs to employ Prof. E. H. S. Bailey, Professor of Chemistry, Me-tallurgy and Mineralogy, in the Kansas State University, one of the most eminent Chem ists in this country, to make a critical quan-titative analysis in order to determine each mineral ingredient and the amount of it, contained in these mineral waters, and as scon as completed it will be made public. In the meantime, the Geuda Mineral Springs Company, of the town by that name, is being flooded with inquiries from every state in the Union, and it now looks as if Saratoga and other prominent resorts are to be forgotten in the excitement over this new Kan-

If the person is born with natural inability of the nerves, all the medicine in existence cannot make them a constitution, or furnish health. If by mental and physical overwork, or dissipation, the healthy nervous system is weakened, we are sick because they are unable to keep the functions going. In such a case, how much do you gain by forcing a function with an irritating drug? The reaction leaves its nerves weaker than before. This accounts for the thousands of nervous women in existence. The Moxie Nerve Food has proved 100,000 times that it can restore such cases without harm.
